Did You Know That Financial Exploitation is the Most Commonly Reported Form of Abuse of Seniors?

Financial exploitation is one form of senior abuse. Other forms include neglect, physical, emotional or sexual abuse.

Financial exploitation has two main forms – financial abuse and economic crime.

Financial exploitation can happen to anyone. If it happens to you, remember – you are not alone, and you are not to blame.

Economic crime includes consumer fraud, investment fraud, scams and identity theft. These crimes can be carried out through email or the Internet, by door-to-door salespeople or by telemarketers.

Call Consumer Protection BC, the BC Securities Commission or your local police if you suspect you have been targeted.

Financial Abuse is a Violation of Trust

An example is when someone you know and trust – a family member, friend or care provider – tries to take what belongs to you, such as your money, your property or other assets.

Financial abuse is wrong. Sometimes it is also illegal.

Examples of Financial Abuse:

- Someone puts pressure on you to gain access to your money or property;
- Someone puts pressure on you to lend them money;
- Someone misuses a power of attorney to take your money; and
- Someone forces or tricks you into signing or changing a contract or will.

Financial abuse often goes hand in hand with emotional abuse. The person may manipulate you, bully you or threaten you to get your money or other valuables.

Remember...it's your money

What Should You Do?

Prevent it!

- Conduct your own financial matters as much as possible.
- Plan ahead and make your wishes known.
- Say "No" when someone pressures you for money – even family members.
- Make sure you understand every document you sign.

Report it!

- Talk to someone you trust.
- Call your local police. They may investigate to determine if the abuse is a crime and may recommend how to proceed.

- Call the Public Guardian and Trustee of B.C. if someone is misusing their powers under a power of attorney that you granted to them.

Get legal information and advice!

- Talk with a lawyer and review the resources below when making plans, such as making a power of attorney.
- Good legal information and advice is an important investment.
